When fashion meets environmental protection, renew life from old fabrics

Minglin Lace will bring you a completely different innovative experience again at TITAS 2023 Taipei Textile Exhibition!

Breaking away from the stereotyped impression of "traditional industries", when fashion meets environmental protection, how to recreate life from old fabrics, what kind of sparks will it spark?

Minglin Lace and the students of the Fashion Department of Kunming University have used their creativity to create 30 to 50 retro-style costumes and shapes by using the discarded edges and retro amoeba fabrics of "Renmei Trademark" and "Minglin Lace".

And combined with the development of electric vehicles in the school, a section of "Return to the Bright Era – Sustainable Fashion Show of Electric Antique Cars" will be designed.

At the same time, using Minglin Lace's unique embroidery lace waste fabric combined with student hand-knitting techniques to create 2 fashionable lace fashions, which were shortlisted for the 2023 AW Taipei Fashion Week and were designed in Songyan Cultural and Creative Park in March this year Public performances between colleges and universities. The students reinterpreted "lace waste" and combined the theme of Tainan's 400 years to create fashionable clothing, which was well received at the exhibition.

Minglin Lace not only introduces the old and brings forth the new in fabrics, but also develops a series of creative lace fabrics by combining technological materials and local cultural themes, such as: light storage lace, hardened lace, etc., unique lace fabrics; at the same time, it also actively promotes sustainable fashion. The spirit of linking up with various colleges and universities, investing in education and training, and combining the creativity of teachers and students to develop a number of unique creative works, will also give full play to the creative value of the zero-size cloth code in the company.

Minglin Lace will widely use the unique and luxurious characteristics of embroidery lace art in fashion clothing and home decoration construction products at TITAS 2023, and is committed to creating a new experience of style lace art for consumers and buyers.
